Our History

In the 1980's, Barbara Scibetta, the daughter of a German War Bride, and Elfrieda Shukert, the daughter of an Austrian War Bride and herself a veteran of the U.S. Army, met at San Francisco State University while attending a course in "Problems of American Identity." They became co-authors of the book, "War Brides of World War II" which was published by Presidio Press in 1988. During their five years of research for the book, they had been in touch with more than 2000 War Brides from all 50 states. They also organized the very first War Brides reunion on board the Queen Mary in the harbor of Long Beach, California. This beautiful ship was most appropriate because so many of the English War Brides had come over on her during and after the war. This first reunion took place in April of 1985 and was attended by 500 War Brides and their husbands. Those who attended this reunion remember it well and still talk about it because it was the very first time War Brides from so many different countries got together.

A War Bride or Groom is any foreign national who married an American member of the Armed Forces who served during any conflict from WWII to the present. During the war and after years about one million War Brides from 50 different countries came over here primarily "for the love of an American soldier." Not since the last great wave of immigration in the 1920's had so many people, so many women in particular, immigrated to the United States.
